I 次の文を読んで、後の設問に答えなさい。

Little Thomas Alva Edison always asked questions about things he did not understand. Not far from his home was a place where men built ships. It was called a shipyard. He liked to go there and watch the men work. He asked questions of every man who would talk with him. “What is that thing?” “What is it used for?” “Why are they doing this?” “Why are they doing that?”

Little Thomas Edison liked to try things out for himself. It was another way of finding out about things. One time when he was six years old his father found him in the barn. He was sitting on a nest of eggs.

“I’m hatching out chickens,” he said. Then his father remembered. A few days before, the boy had asked many questions about a goose that was sitting on some eggs. Now he was trying to find out for himself if he could hatch the chickens’ eggs by keeping them warm.

It was hard for a boy who wanted to find out about so many things to keep out of trouble. Once he started a fire to find out what would happen. The fire spread and soon a barn was burned down. He was given a good whipping for that.

Little Thomas went to school for only a few months. The teacher could not understand the boy who asked so many questions. She thought he was a little strange. Many of the neighbors thought so too, but Thomas’s mother did not think so. Therefore, she began to teach him at home. Before long he was much better educated than any of the other boys of his age.
