(i)

Shawn : Hi, I'm calling about your advertisement. Are you still looking for a roommate?

Dave : Yes, I am.

Shawn : My name is Shawn and I am a university student. I study history and I work at a restaurant at night to earn money.

Dave : That sounds great. Do you have any pets?

Shawn : I love animals but I do not have any pets.

Dave : Great. Me neither. Let's see...do you cook?

Shawn :  I usually cook 1-2 nights a week.

Dave : I see. One more question. Do you smoke?

Shawn : I do not smoke. I hate the smell and I don't want to get sick. If you smoke, I can't be your roommate.

Dave :  I think we should meet here in the apartment and see if you like it. How's tomorrow at noon?

Shawn : Sunday at noon. Perfect, I'll be there!

V 次の英文を読んで、後の設問に答えなさい。

Do you often ask for advice? If you do, who do you ask? This probably depends on the kind of advice you need. Asking for advice is not just for young people. No matter how old you are, there is always someone with more experience or someone who can show you a different way of thinking.

Keep in mind that you can ask for advice, but you don't have to take all the advice. In fact, if you ask your parents and a friend, you may hear two totally different ideas. This is great because you can understand that not all people think the same. It is like a debate, and you get to choose which idea is right for you.

It may be good to ask someone from another gender for advice. After all, men and women do not always think alike. If you are a man who wants advice about a woman, why not ask a woman? There are scientific reasons for the differences between men and women. One example is that women have a larger *limbic system in the brain which keeps them closer to their feelings and emotions. This is not to say that men don't understand their own feelings but why not ask for another point of view?

No matter who you ask for advice, the final decision is yours. You absolutely must try to get the best advice, but it is your life and your decision.

*limbic system (大脳) 辺縁系
