The Flatiron Building is one of the most photographed buildings in New York City. It was completed in 1902 and is located on 23rd Street between 5th Avenue and Broadway. First it was called the Fuller Building, but since it looks like a clothing iron, it became known as the Flatiron Building.

Although the Flatiron Building is only 22 stories and 87 meters high, it is considered one of the world's first skyscrapers.* Daniel Burnham from Chicago designed it like a classical Greek column. Shaped like a triangle, it is only two meters wide at its narrowest point. Many New Yorkers at the time thought it was so thin that the wind might knock it over.

Elevators are one of the key points in building tall buildings and the Flatiron was the last building in New York to have elevators powered by water pressure. They were replaced in 1999 as many companies with offices there complained about the poor service. One company on the 21st floor had all the employees take the stairs every day so they could stay in shape.

It was never the tallest building in New York and seems tiny compared to the 102 floors of the Empire State Building. Still, it is one of the most celebrated buildings in the city today. The future looks bright for the 113-year-old building. It is now owned by an Italian company and they have plans to turn it into a luxury hotel a few years from now. The building is said to be worth 190 million dollars today.
